Your best bet is contacting an attorney familiar with such cases immediately. Laws vary greatly from state to state, and you may need to seek legal action to enforce the contract. Each state has it's own Board of Funeral Directors, and you can also contact them to see if they have other suggestions for you regarding your situation. This is a scenario that is becoming more and more common, and often family members do not know who to turn to for help. A good lawyer should be able to quickly and effectively remedy the situation.
